They are always available, never and always excited to get you out and spend some quality time with you. Exercise with the dog is both mentally stimulating and offers numerous health benefits. A trip through the great outdoors or even a daily walk can have numerous benefits for both dogs and humans. Exercise helps with blood circulation, by replying to healthy weight, and reduces the risk of contracting diseases. Breathing fresh air and feeling the sun on your skin can be a great morale booster while being mentally stimulating. The best thing about exercising with your dog is that he's doing it together, building memories that will strengthen your relationship. Below are all the tips you need for a great running adventure with your best friend.1. Make sure your dog is Ready before putting in serious miles, I want to make sure your dog is fit correctly. Some breeds have a natural fit for working partners: retriever, shepherd and terrier are suitable in all this category. Short-faced dogs such as toy breeds, giant breeds and pugs are usually suitable for a better brisk walk. Of all breeds and mixtures, the dog will tell you if they pay attention and enjoy themselves. In terms of age, I usually don't want to start by putting in serious miles until your dog's skeleton is fully formed - about 12 months for the average dog and 18 months for older dogs. Regardless of your dog's unique condition or breed, you should consult the veterinarian before taking seriously about working with the dog. Exercise with dogs is also part of the challenge being to have the right tools. A good dog harm gives you more control and a hand The dog can be running when it is very useful on the tasma or running with the puppy. Playing with the dog is a great way to help them get exercise 2. Start Slow You may be a super-fit experienced runner, but remember that pooch has a different level of fitness than you. Make it easy to run with your dog – try a nice run/walk on your daily walk. Move up to 10-15 minutes several times a week, and if your offspring works so well, you can slowly extend the time/distance over time. If you see the pooch slowing down, you need to breathe too heavy or need to stop, then you need to restore your position and time and/or distance by forcing them too hard. Remember that they will try to push hard to please themselves, so you need to be very aware of their physical condition and change your work for them if necessary.3. Warm up just like us, your pooch needs some time to warm up these muscles and joints, so if you don't jump into a 5K sprint you will risk injury to both the dog and yourself. Walking to a brisk 5-minute walk/run on a run will both breathe you into the running mindset and synchrony your timing and rhythm. It is also a great opportunity to encourage the dog to get things done before entering serious run. No one wants to stop for a toilet break after taking their own step, so you can get a pattern of dogs using the bathroom during this warm up phase, you will both be happy.4. Choose Your Route and Surface Carefully It is important for both your safety and happiness to make sure you are not on a route with heavy car or foot traffic, especially if your dog has just started running or is not as well trained as you would like. Give a large bend to other pedestrians, dogs and cars you encounter along the way. With more confidence in each other, it's easier to navigate more crowded areas. The surface that you run on is as important to the dog as it is to you. Very like a person, you can suffer concrete and asphalt and damage your dog's joints. Be sure to check that the surface is not too hot, especially if it is warm outside – if it hurts to see your hand on the surface, it is too hot for your dog's exposed paws. If possible, dirt trails are an excellent option to ensure a safe and comfortable surface. Hands-free dog can run with 5 dogs much easier than a tasma. Keep Your Dog Under Control for safety, comfort and performance, it is highly recommended that running with your dog is an activity on a tasma. Nothing says you can't find a great place for some off-tasma fun during a study, but it should be done on a tasma to maximize real employee activity and safety. Sudden concussions on a shock absorbing dog cans are recommended to protect you.6. Bring Two Water It's always easy to bring water for yourself, but sometimes it's easy to forget to bring something for your 4-legged working partner. you also need hydration – a general rule is that if you think you will be dehydrated, there will also be a dog. Even if it's swimming Along the route for the dog, the trip will help keep them drinking potentially bacteria-laden water by bringing clean, clear water for them. A dog water bottle can be invaluable to keep the dog juicy on the road. For long runs or walks, consider bringing food for the dog as too. A dog treatment belt is an excellent option for on-the-run snacks, and even comes with a spot for a poop bag dispenser. 7. Mind Weather Common sense goes a long way to ensure a happy work with pooch, and the weather is no exception. If you are wearing a jacket to stay cold, and warm, think the same for pooch (unless you are heavily isolated to start with them). Something like our Thermo Winter Vest is to keep the working partner warm and dry in the hot, weatherproof jacket. If it's hot outside, bring extra water for both of you and consider changing course to add a cool swim somewhere along the way. If your dog is sun sensitive, or you plan to spend some serious time in the water, consider a dog rashie to protect them from heat and harmful UV rays.8. Add a Cooling Time like you, your dog shouldn't fall asleep from a flat sprint without transition time another. Create a cooling-down period in your last 3-5 minutes of running – slow down your speed and end your final destination with a short walk. This will allow both muscles to slow down breathing and heart rate and facilitate their return into the daily routine.9. Check Your Pooch After Running Be sure to twice check for signs of excessive exertion. Extreme panting, extreme weakness and very red gums/tongue heat stroke all symptoms and you need to cool the dog down immediately. Cold towels on their backs and cold water on their paws help, but if they show any of these signs, take them to the vet immediately after they start to cool. You should also do a quick check for trace treasures such as foxtails, burrs, ticks, sheet grass and glass. For any foreign objects, look inside the nose, ears, back, paws and dog sides. Remember that your Pooch9 controls a post-run. Reward Yourself For Having a Great Time and Working With Your Dog can be one of the most rewarding and powerful bonding experiences you'll ever have with your best friend. Remember yourself (both of you) are there to have fun and get some exercise. Make sure your dog knows that you appreciate their company and that they eventually join you by giving them love. However, for serious runs, avoid treats until you run after 30-60 minutes to make sure there is time to settle stomach exertion. Following these basic rules will be enough to bring you and your dog together for a few miles of fun, bonding and good-old-fashioned exercise. If you have any concerns about your dog before, after or during the run, please take him to the vet. You can see your dog is the best employee you can see. It never was, and your dog can feel the same way. Now go and play! Play!
